Honey Ryder

The original Bond girl with the best entrance in cinematic history shows us how to do beach glamour – 007 style

IN THE NO

Honey Ryder (played by Ursula Andress) has a lot to answer for when it comes to pre-holiday anxiety, having upped the beachwear ante to epic proportions after her infamous emergence from the sea in 1962's Dr. No. Sure, we had Sean Connery playing the devilishly handsome James Bond, but it was Honey who stole the show as a knife-wielding shell-diver. Her legacy lives on, having spawned a million copycat bikinis (Ursula was once quoted as saying 'this bikini made me a success'), while even modern-day Bond girls have paid homage, with Halle Berry re-enacting her on-screen entrance in Die Another Day.

BRONZE GODDESS

To make-up or not to make-up, that is the question when confronted with the annual poolside parade. Most of us are united in not wanting to wear a full-face on holiday, but there's a fine line between being washed out and washed away from a boat party, and the look strikes the perfect balance. 'Honey has that timeless sun-kissed look with glowing skin, groomed brows and heavy eyes,' says make-up master Ruby Hammer. How to get it: 'Start with a BB cream, then adding cream blush to cheeks. Next, use a taupe eyeshadow on the lid and a pencil size liner to the lash line, followed by a coat of waterproof mascara. The finish with a protective oil on the lips.'

'For Honey's look, keep textures creamy so it's not too made-up and go for peachy colours to complement a tan'

BEACHY BOMBSHELL

She may live in Jamaica, but there's no Monica from Friends-style Caribbean frizz going on here. Having officially made wet-look hair a 'thing', Honey's signature look when on dry land is a tumble of soft waves with that classic 60s height at the crown. 'I always think of this look as super-sexy with a touch of vamp,' says hairstylist Louis Byrne. 'It has a retro feel, but it's totally possible to bring it up-to-date without straying too far away.' Byrne suggests spritzing a thickening spray onto damp hair before blow-drying upside down with a bristle brush. Once dry, section your hair, fashion into barrel rolls and pin to add volume and texture. Leave to cool, brush out and gently backcomb the crown, finishing with a spritz of texture spray for hold.
